DURING the last few years, the growth of the business of the Standard Oil Company has been such as to require the investment of funds in excess of the amount available from the company's surplus earnings, although during the eight years ended December 31, 1919, over $300,000,000. was invested in the property out of earnings. The company has, further, during the last two years, provided the sum of about $196,000,000. through the sale of the preferred stock now outstanding. While the conditions prevailing in the oil business cannot be positively foreseen for long periods, the company believes that current earnings will be sufficient to provide in the future for its ordinary capital requirements without the necessity of any additional
